

Sonnet 24

~ Atharva Rewatkar

The background of the image is a dark, textured surface resembling a cracked or shattered material. Small, glowing white and yellow particles are scattered across the surface, appearing like stars or distant galaxies. In the center, there is a bright, circular light source, possibly a moon or a star, which casts a soft glow and illuminates the surrounding area.

Shall I put the blame on thee for heartbreaks that we endure?
Gloom shrouds in cloak of glee and continues to darken our azure.

The background of the image is a dark, textured surface that resembles a cracked or shattered material. It is set against a dark blue-grey background that is speckled with numerous small white stars of varying sizes. In the center of the image, there are two bright, glowing crescent shapes. The top crescent is located near the top center, and the bottom crescent is located towards the bottom center. Both crescent shapes have a bright, white core and a curved, glowing edge.

Shall I put the blame on our stars
for the cracks in our skies?
Faults art not decided on altars, they're decisions based on lies.

The background features a dark, textured surface resembling cracked earth or stone, with numerous small white dots representing stars. Two glowing, circular nodes are visible: one near the top center and another near the bottom center. A thin crescent moon is positioned between these nodes. The overall atmosphere is mysterious and celestial.

An eternal Abode I felt twas a permanent place in thy bosom.
A long sojourn it seems twas as verity in my mind doth blossom.

Experiences! Cassandra of the Skies!
Thou spread misery as our Abode dies